Your seeds should be ready to harvest within 110 to 125 days after you planted the flower. This means that if you planted your seeds in May, your sunflower will die in early or mid-August and you should have ready-to-harvest seeds in late-August or September. Because sunflowers are annual plants, they must be replanted year after year.

The distinction between annual and perennial plants is generally understood by most gardeners. Annual plants complete their entire life cycle in a single year, going from seed to plant to flower and back to seed, then dying off. Perennials, on the other hand, are plants that go from seed to seed within one season but which do not die at the end of the season.
