Music For The Catholic Choir

For centuries music has been passed down from old organists to younger, newer organists, music that was composed to be played at the most Sacred Liturgies of the Roman Catholic Mass. Much of it is based upon Gregorian Chants that have been sung and are continuing to be sung even today around the world in Catholic churches and monasteries.

The choir doesn't spend time rehearsing most of the liturgy's music precisely because most of the music is congregational. The choir just joins in on it. In my favored scenario, the congregational foundation of the liturgical music means that the choir focuses on fewer elements because the choir's role is secondary to the congregation.

Contemporary Catholic liturgical music makes heavy use of "responsorial" settings in which the congregation sings only a short refrain (like "Glory to God in the highest") between verses entrusted to the cantor or choir. This differs from the "responsive" antiphony of Gregorian chant, in which alternate verses are divided between two bodies.
